Mandate

The Nova Scotia Public Prosecution Service (PPS) is a functionally independent agency of government created by the Public Prosecutions Act. It shares a common Minister and some common services with the Department of Justice, but it is not a division nor part of the Department of Justice. In addition to its statutory responsibilities, the Public Prosecution Service and its members contribute, where appropriate and feasible, to the formulation of public policy in the administration of justice.

The Public Prosecution Service, by statute, is responsible for:

- prosecution of all Criminal Code offences;
- prosecution of some other federal statutes;
- prosecution of provincial summary conviction offences;
- appeals before the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia;
- appeals before the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal;
- appeals before the Supreme Court of Canada;
- representation at Criminal Conviction Review Board hearings; and
- providing advice to police in respect of prosecutions generally or in respect of particular investigations.

Core Functions

The core functions of the Nova Scotia Public Prosecution Service are to:

- Represent the Crown in the conduct of criminal trials and quasi-criminal appeals before all levels of courts.
- Participate in the development of criminal law and criminal prosecutions policy.
- Provide advice to police in respect of prosecutions generally or in respect of particular investigations.

Goals

The following goals will help support the Public Prosecution Service in achieving its mandate and performing its core functions:

- Through cooperation with other Justice partners, continue to develop strategies to deal with the new delay framework set out by the Supreme Court of Canada in its R. v. Jordan decision in July, 2016.
- To increase our capacity to respond to the complexity of Human Trafficking Prosecutions and to improve support for victims of these crimes going through the prosecution process.

Priorities/Activities/Initiatives for 2021-22

Responding to the Jordan Decision

In July 2016, the Supreme Court of Canada rendered a judgement in the appeal of R. v. Jordan which set new rules for an accused's right to be tried within a reasonable time period. All Supreme Court cases and all trials which have a preliminary inquiry, now have a time limit of 30 months from the date when the charge has been laid to the completion of the trial. For Provincial Court trials, the time limit is 18 months from the date when the charge has been laid to the completion of the trial. For cases which go over these time limits, the delay is considered to be presumptively unreasonable and the charges will be stayed. The only recourse at our disposal is for Crown Attorneys to establish the presence of exceptional circumstances, which are defined as being outside the Crown's control in the sense that (1) they are reasonably unforeseen or reasonably unavoidable, and (2) the Crown cannot reasonably remedy the delays emanating from those circumstances once they arise.

Since this new framework was retrospective, these time lines applied to most cases already in the system.

The Public Prosecution Service created two (2) term Crown Attorney positions to assist the Service in dealing with pressures associated with the new delay framework in place resulting from the Jordan Decision. The original funding for these term positions was granted in the 2017/18 Budget, with an extension for 2 years granted in the 2018/19 Budget. These two (2) Crown Attorney positions have now been made permanent positions within the Public Prosecution Service.

The Service has been able to combine these positions with 3 term Crown Attorney positions to staff the Intake Team Pilot Project in Halifax Region. The purpose of this pilot project has been to determine if a shift in the timing of Crown work on files can:

- ✓ Increase early resolution of files.
- ✓ Identify and address files with Realistic Prospect of Conviction issues.
- ✓ Improve the quality of files being set for trial.
- ✓ Lower the number of court appearances on the routine criminal files.

The Intake Team was put in place September 1, 2017.

The Intake Team is able to conduct an earlier review of files to assess the quality of the evidence, the likelihood of conviction, the potential for early resolution and the review of potential witness lists.

When these decisions can be made before a trial date is set – there is less likelihood of trial collapse late in the process. When a trial collapses on the day of trial, that time is essentially lost.

An initial sentencing offer, that might be a little more favourable to an accused than they might expect after a trial, can free up trial dates for more complex cases.

An early referral to restorative justice can divert some cases from the traditional system altogether.

For the period of September 1, 2017 to October 31, 2020, the Intake Team has:

- Reduced trial wait times in the Dartmouth Provincial Court
 - Prior to the Intake Team – 12 Months
 - With Intake Team in place - 2 – 3 months.
- Resolved 2,504 cases by way of an early resolution or a referral to restorative justice.
- Identified 1,948 police officers who were not required to be subpoenaed to attend court unnecessarily. This is a significant cost savings for police agencies.

Human Trafficking Prosecutions

Human Trafficking and sexual exploitation are devastating to victims and survivors, families and entire communities.

That is why government is investing more into programs, services and supports that will raise awareness, prevention and directly help victims and survivors of human trafficking offences, with an added focus on Mi'kmaw and African Nova Scotian communities.

The Public Prosecution Service has created a Crown Attorney position which is dedicated to prosecuting human trafficking cases. As well, additional funding has been dedicated to specialized training for Crown Attorneys on human trafficking issues.
