Schedule C – Strategic Alignment Plan

1.0 Background and purpose

Nova Scotia's post-secondary sector is a competitive advantage for the province. Increased capacity to conduct research and utilize cutting-edge technologies and equipment make innovation and productivity gains possible. For Nova Scotia's residents and potential students, access to higher education provides fundamental knowledge, community engagement, higher earnings, entrepreneurial skills, and improved employment potential.

Over the past twenty years, the province and publicly funded universities have worked through a series of Memorandums of Understandings and bilateral agreements. Since 2016, Outcome Agreements have been in place with publicly funded universities. A critical assessment of Nova Scotia's direction, its evolving economy, the demands of a changing population, along with how the system balances current, mid-term, and future needs of the post-secondary system, students, businesses, sectors, and industries is needed. Through high-quality education, post-secondary institutions are well positioned to contribute to the advancement of government priorities, economic growth, and positive social impact.

To support this direction, the provincial government (the "Province") has invested significantly in Nova Scotia's post-secondary education sector; with the highest per capita expenditures on universities than any other province¹. Government recognizes that post-secondary institutions are an important economic contributor to the province and that Government plays a critical role in the sustainability of the sector.

As part of this relationship, ensuring accountability for public investment is an important tenet of government funding. Enhancements that make it easier to tell the story of how government investment in institutions is providing value to the province will be an important component of the agreements between government and post-secondary institutions going forward. Moving forward, funding will be attached to performance measurement and transparent reporting will be part of the terms and conditions of receiving funding.

The aim of this Request for Strategic Alignment Proposal is to foster the competitive advantage of Nova Scotia's post-secondary sector and further maximize the value of a post-secondary education to society, to the student, and to future potential members of Nova Scotia's workforce. Further, it articulates the Province's vision for Nova Scotia and its future and calls upon universities to demonstrate the enhanced role the institution can play in realizing it.

2.0 Government priorities and guidance to publicly funded universities

To be fully aligned to the resources and needs of Nova Scotia, it is expected that universities find ways to support and contribute to helping the Province reach its economic, demographic and health care goals.

1. Action for Health

The Province is focused on creating an efficient, modern, equitable, and respectful healthcare system. We are working to become a magnet for health providers; to provide the care Nova Scotians need and deserve; to cultivate excellence on healthcare frontlines; to build accountability at every level of the healthcare system; to be responsive and resilient; and to address the factors affecting health and wellbeing in Nova Scotia. Post-secondary institutions are important partners for each of the six core solutions and can contribute to advancing the achievement of these by training health care professionals, conducting cutting edge research, and through medical advancements and innovation. Institutions also have a role to play in helping the government advance the actions in the Health Equity Framework.

2. Improving the standard of living in Nova Scotia

Post-secondary institutions can help Nova Scotia improve its standard of living to one of the best in Canada by ensuring we have a high-quality post-secondary education system where students thrive and graduate with in-demand skills to be successful in today's workforce. Post-secondary institutions can apply equity, diversity, inclusion, and accessibility principles to increase the number of students from underserved communities enrolling and graduating.

3. Increasing the overall productivity of Nova Scotia

One of the ways we might improve the standard of living in Nova Scotia is to increase our overall productivity; either through technological advances or by enhancing the skills of the labour force. Post-secondary institutions drive productivity in the medium and long term by helping to introduce innovation and technologies into the provincial economy. They also improve the skills of the labour force and - with proper foresight - can help build alignment between training, program offerings, skilling, and re-skilling of the labour supply with current and future labour needs.

4. Doubling the population of Nova Scotia by 2060

The Province has a target to double the population of Nova Scotia by 2060. Post-secondary institutions can contribute to the province's population growth through attraction and retention of international and interprovincial students, faculty, and researchers. Post-secondary institutions play a contributing role in ensuring that newcomers, including students, faculty, and researchers, feel welcomed, included, supported to succeed, have meaningful opportunities to contribute and connect to their new communities, have viable housing and transportation options, and have access to affordable food.

2.1 Advanced Education's Key Priorities for Nova Scotia's Post-Secondary Education System

In addition to supporting the Province's overarching priorities, Advanced Education has laid out three key goals for the post-secondary education system with equity, inclusion, diversity and accessibility at the foundation of their achievement. Government invests in the sector because it wants to ensure that:

- 1. Nova Scotia has a student-centred post-secondary education system where all learners thrive. In practice this means:
 - a. student's mental wellness, health, social development and housing needs are met;
 - b. students have access to programs and services that help them enter and complete their studies;
 - c. graduates have meaningful connections to the labour market;
 - d. students have access to affordable post-secondary education, adequate financial supports and manageable debt upon graduation;
 - e. students have meaningful mechanisms to provide regular and ongoing feedback about their needs and experiences in the post-secondary education system; and
 - f. inequities and systemic barriers to participation in post-secondary are addressed and removed.

- 2. Nova Scotia has a high-quality, relevant, accountable, and sustainable post-secondary education system. In practice this means the Nova Scotia post-secondary education system is:
 - a. sustainable, efficient and internationally competitive;
 - b. offering high-quality programs with flexible learning pathways for completion and life-long learning options;
 - c. transparent about achieving performance measures and meeting clearly defined targets;
 - d. implementing effective ways for institutions, stakeholders and government to engage in collaborative planning and stewardship of the system and to share new or innovative ideas to enhance system performance;
 - e. implementing the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada Calls to Action; and
 - f. offering inclusive and responsive education for Mi'kmaq and Indigenous peoples, African Nova Scotian, and Black peoples, LGBTQIA2S+ and persons with disabilities.

- 3. Nova Scotia has a post-secondary education system that advances excellence and equity in research and innovation. In practice this means:

- a. focusing research and innovation on meeting the current and future social, cultural, and economic needs of provincial, regional, national and international communities;
- b. investing in the development and attraction of highly-qualified workers for Nova Scotia's labour market;
- c. enhancing the competitiveness of Nova Scotia's industries and attracting additional research and innovation investment; and
- d. leveraging research and innovation initiatives to understand and anticipate changes and emerging trends in post-secondary education so that the sector can respond proactively to build and anticipate solutions for today and for the future.

Given the overall Provincial direction, Advanced Education has outlined six priority outcomes that would help to achieve these priorities and better align the post-secondary education system's contributions in these areas. Common outcomes for the publicly funded post-secondary system and institutions include:

1. Programs tailored to meet current and future economic and labour market needs.
2. Students well prepared for the labour market with practical in-demand, 21st century skills.
3. Student well-being and mental health are supported.
4. Accelerated and efficient education of students.
5. Graduation of students and attachment to the workforce.
6. Research and innovation focused on transforming post-secondary education, achieving provincial priorities, and advancing the public good.

3.0 Strategic Alignment Proposal Requirements

Schedule E – Committees

A. Partnership committee focused on post-secondary system transformation and overall stewardship of the university system

Representatives from Advanced Education and universities will continue to mutually convene a Partnership Committee. This committee will continue to play an important role by providing overall leadership for shared work and initiatives that drive post-secondary education system transformation. Government Deputy Ministers and University Presidents will provide direction and continue to be accountable for the overall stewardship of the university system in Nova Scotia. This committee will meet quarterly. This table would also be responsible for making the final decision on which shared indicators, metrics and measures will be considered for use across the system to demonstrate system-wide performance and progress on shared outcomes in future agreements.

B. Academic programming committee focused on enhancing and modernizing academic programming, and student well-being (new)

Academic programming is central to the post-secondary system's contribution to the province. Modern academic programming focused on areas of high need and programs that keep pace with emerging trends are essential to ensuring our post-secondary education system remains globally competitive. The implementation of pedagogy and learning outcomes that impart opportunities for learning and practicing 21st century skills for today's workplaces are also important. Ensuring students have opportunities within their academic programs for experiential learning so that they gain hands-on work experience and build their networks are key. The Province has an interest in ensuring that programming is planned and operated in ways that meet the current and future needs of Nova Scotia.

Government's priority is for the post-secondary education system to be student-centred. This means ensuring all learners are thriving in this system. Student success and completion of their programs depends on them having the right supports and efforts focused on their wellbeing. Students are a diverse group with varying needs, which brings with it competing demands and the need for challenging decisions within institutions and the broader system. The growing number of international students from diverse cultural backgrounds and growing number of students with accessibility needs require institutions to pay attention to the types of supports they offer to meet these diverse needs and whether these supports are effective to ensure student success.

Vice-Presidents Academic and their teams will be required to work with Advanced Education to define a set of shared indicators, metrics and measures that will show how institutions are supporting the following shared outcomes for the Partnership Committee's approval:

- Programs tailored to meet current and future economic and labour market needs.

- Students well prepared for the labour market with practical 21st century skills.
- Student well-being and mental health is supported.
- Accelerated and efficient education of students.
- Graduation of students and attachment to the workforce

C. Financial sustainability and accountability committee focused on enhancing financial transparency, accountability and financial oversight of the university system (new)

Financial sustainability of the post-secondary education sector is essential to the achievement of priorities and goals. Ensuring transparency and accountability for financial health and performance that supports the ongoing delivery of an effective post-secondary system is also critical. To enhance our collective ability to manage resources effectively and steward public funding, new metrics/indicators, processes, and governance structures for monitoring the financial health of institutions will be introduced in 2025-26. Collaborative efforts of this committee will also support institutions to create a plan focused on the reduction of administrative cost by 5% through inter-university initiatives.

As part of a risk-based approach, Advanced Education will enhance its monitoring of financial health across a range of indicators with an objective to better identify issues early on so solutions can be implemented proactively. Institutions will be expected to work collaboratively with Advanced Education to determine how that may be accomplished and may include enhancements to the Standardized Financial Reporting Template. Institutions will be expected to standardize the presentation and disclosure of their audited financial statements across the sector. A financial health indicator framework will be developed to help monitor the financial health across institutions, including benchmarks.

Vice-Presidents of Administration and Finance and their teams will be required to work with Advanced Education to advance collaboratively the above initiatives.

D. Research and innovation committee focused on improving coordination and connection of research and innovation (new)

Nova Scotia's post-secondary education system is an important driver in research and innovation. The Province has an interest in ensuring the research and innovation agenda is focused on meeting current and future needs provincially and contributing to regional, national and global needs. Public investment in research and innovation supports the development and attraction of highly qualified people to the province which advances our goals of improving the standard of living in the province and our helping us reach our population targets. Research discoveries and innovations enhance the provinces competitiveness, labour productivity and our ability to attract additional research and innovation investments. Lastly, turning research and innovation inward towards the post-secondary education system itself ensures our institutions will be ready to weather an increasingly volatile, uncertain, complex, and ambiguous global landscape with resilience as expectations of the system and needs for post-secondary education change over time.

Vice-Presidents of Research and Innovation will be required to work with Advanced Education, Nova Scotia Community College, Research Nova Scotia, Mitacs and other research and innovation ecosystems partners as required at a new shared table that is focused on enhancing the connections and coordination of efforts to achieve priorities across the research and innovation ecosystems. This table would also be responsible for defining a set of shared indicators, metrics and measures that will show how institutions are moving the needle on the following shared outcomes:

- Students well prepared for the labour market with practical 21st century skills.
- Achieve provincial priorities, including research and innovation initiatives that are focused on raising the standard of living; increasing productivity in Nova Scotia; doubling the population of the Province; and addressing Nova Scotia's healthcare challenges;
- Ensure that discoveries and solutions generated by publicly funded research and innovation projects are pursued using open science and in ways that are designed to benefit and advance the public good; and Transform post-secondary education using innovation methods and approaches to enhance diversity and inclusion within institutions, identify and anticipate what types and forms of education will be needed in the future and adapt programs so they evolve to support those future needs.
