

Protecting 12% of Nova Scotia by 2015.

In 2007, government passed the Environmental Goals and Sustainable Prosperity Act, committing to protecting 12 percent of Nova Scotia's land by 2015. In November 2009, government received the Colin Stewart Forest Forum report identifying land with high conservation values. Government has reviewed these areas with regard to assessing the natural quality of the lands and confirming ownership. We're making good progress, towards our 12 percent goal, but we still have work to do.

This map will help you understand the process, locate the areas being reviewed and let you know what you can do to help.

What do we mean when we say "Protect"?

When we protect our land, we keep it natural. Protected lands in Nova Scotia are areas for people to enjoy that are free from development. There are no homes, no factories or farms. The trees are left to grow, die, and feed the forest in a natural life cycle. When we refer to protected "land" we also mean lakes and rivers.

Where are we now?

The total base of Nova Scotia is roughly 5,528,000 hectares. Approximately 8.6% (474,399 ha) is legally protected. This is comprised of Wilderness areas (314,819 ha), Nature reserves (4,972 ha), larger Provincial parks (10,319 ha), National parks (134,988 ha), National wildlife areas (2,397 ha), and land trust areas (6,905 ha).

To meet the 12% target (663,360 ha) an additional 3.4% (188,961 ha) needs to be protected. To provide flexibility in decision making, more land than is needed to meet the 12 percent target is included in the process. The 12 percent lands shown here total 218,838 ha.

What happens next?

The next step is a 12 percent lands review. The goal here is to learn as much as possible about all lands under review before drafting a list of potential protected areas. Consultation will include municipalities, and Mi'kmaq communities, as well as resource interests. Community, wilderness recreation, hunting, fishing, trapping, OHV, and environmental groups will also be included.

In 2012 we will release new maps with proposed protected areas for a public consultation. This is the stage where people can share their support or concern for individual areas. People will be able to look at maps of proposed areas, ask questions, and confirm that their views are heard and considered. We expect the draft protected areas plan to change based on these consultations.

The last step is to complete a final plan. This will consider all the feedback received during public consultation. It will identify the areas to be protected, along with their boundaries. It may also describe special agreements for area use or management.

Once the final protected areas plan is released to the public, government will then take the steps needed to legally protect each area.

How can I contribute?

In June we asked groups and organizations to let us know by August 1 if they were interested in being involved in the 2011 land review step. August 1 was not a submission deadline, but was chosen to help coordinate meeting planning. If you represent a group or organization, and are not sure at this point whether a meeting is required, you can contact us whenever you have made that decision by calling (902) 424-2117, or emailing protectedareas@gov.ns.ca. After August 1, we will begin setting up meetings with interested groups and organizations.

As an individual, you can also provide written comment during the 2011 lands review step. First, review the information about individual lands located at www.gov.ns.ca/nse/12percent/maps.asp. Please be sure to reference the appropriate name and number of the land parcel in your submission.

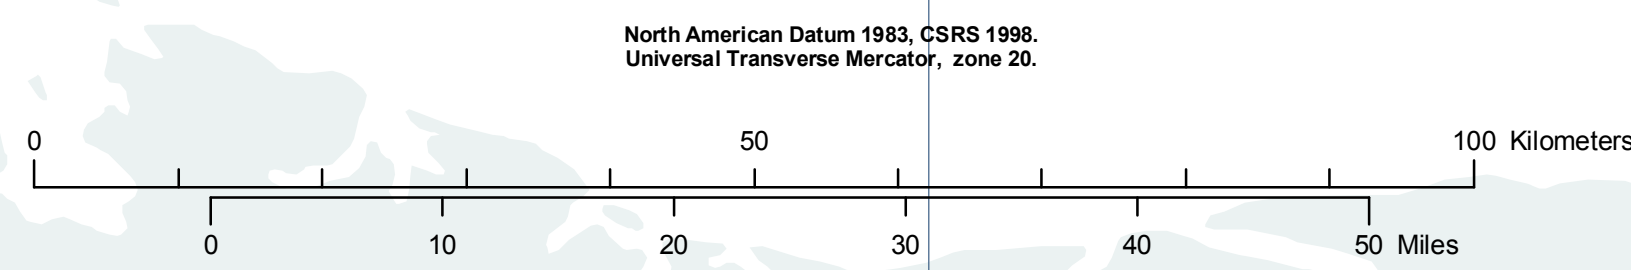

To share your thoughts, fill out an online form, email your comments to protectedareas@gov.ns.ca, or send your comments by mail to:

In 2012, a draft protected areas plan will be released for broad provincial consultation.

What does this map show?

Government has identified possible 12 percent lands for further review. These include provincial Crown lands (shown in red), and some lands owned by major forestry companies (shown in blue). To provide flexibility in decision making, more land than is needed to meet the 12 percent target is included in these selections. The 12 percent lands shown here total 218,838 ha. Existing lands that are legally protected and considered to contribute towards the 12 percent goal are shown in a blue-green. Lands that are committed to be protected are shown in purple. The crown land base of the province is shown in green.

For reference purposes each of the 12 percent lands has been given a number. The index below lists the name of the area, the number of sites it includes and its total area in hectares.

These 12 percent lands are not proposed protected areas. However, government will select most of the proposed protected areas from these lands.
