

2015 Employee Survey

Frequently Asked Questions

Why are employee surveys done?

Since February 2004, employee surveys have been a regular part of how government gathers employee input about their work environment. It is recognized as a best practice for employers to conduct regular employee surveys.

Regular surveying allows employees a chance to anonymously and confidentially share information about their workplace, their leadership and it helps government identify priority areas for action and track progress on issues that are important to employees. It is important to have reliable information on the quality of the work environment from the people within the organization.

How will the employee survey benefit me?

The employee survey provides an opportunity for you to provide candid input to help shape your work environment and create a better workplace for you and your colleagues.

How can you assure my responses are anonymous?

We consider privacy implications prior to any publication of information from survey results. We only provide government departments with a summary of all the information collected. Departments do not have direct access to the responses.

To satisfy any confidentiality requirements, we have also imposed an explicit guideline for reporting on results, there needs to be a minimum number of 10 respondents within a group of least 20, before we can even release the summary results.

Why does the survey ask about my demographics?

Collecting demographic information will provide employees the best opportunity to help shape the work environment. This information enables us to understand how different groups of employees feel about various subjects. You will notice this year we have expanded the personal demographics section to give us a better picture of the diversity within the Public Service. We encourage everyone to respond as it helps to focus action planning as well as our work on corporate strategies, such as the Corporate Engagement and Diversity strategies.

What will be done with the results?

The results will be presented to Deputy Heads. Employees may be invited to participate in further research activities, for example focus groups or committees, to explore the issues raised in the survey, so that specific action plans can be developed. Your input may also be integrated into each department's business plan, and is an indicator of your department's performance. The results also feed into your deputy heads' performance assessment.

How does Government follow-up on the survey results?

Every organization is expected to develop an action plan to address areas for improvement based on the employees voiced opinions in the “How’s Work Going?” survey. Again, employees may be invited to participate in further action planning development work.

Can I see my department's results?

Department and agency reports will be posted on the employee survey website. If you do not see your department or agency listed, it means either your department did not have an adequate response rate or your department/agency has less than 20 employees and will be combined in an “Other” group report.

Can I see the results for my division or branch?

Division/branch reports will be sent out to your Deputy Minister by late summer.

Who participates in the survey?

All permanent, term, contract, casual, temporary and seasonal employees including CUPE Local 1867 are encouraged to participate.

Who conducts the survey?

The Public Service Commission conducts the employee survey on behalf of the Government of Nova Scotia.

How are questions selected for the survey?

An Employee Engagement Inter-jurisdictional Team, with representation from most provinces and territories, as well as the Federal Government, developed common employee survey questions to measure employee engagement for use by interested public service jurisdictions across Canada. The How's Work Going? Employee Engagement Survey incorporates all of the common questions.

Other questions are submitted by management to gather information to help the development or refinement of government programs/policies/initiatives.

I did not receive, or have misplaced my e-mail or survey.
